Whether it is your first home or a move-up, careful planning and budgeting are the keys to meeting your new financial obligations. Problems you once turned over to the landlord (or your parents) are now your responsibility. If it is a move-up, the expenses of maintaining a larger home often grow along with its size. Planning for the routine costs of owning a home as well as unusual situations can help you avoid foreclosure or bankruptcy when emergencies arise. Be prepared for homeownership and add the unexpected to your budget.

BUDGETING IN YOUR NEW HOME

The expense of owning a home goes beyond monthly mortgage and utility payments. Home buyers with minimal cash reserves can find themselves in financial difficulties. Here are some common reasons:

- Failures in plumbing, electrical and heating systems (which seem to occur at the worst possible times) must be repaired.

- In older homes, complete replacement of water heaters, furnaces or kitchen appliances may be needed and can be expensive.

- Even newly built homes require landscaping, interior decoration and furnishings.

The budget you created before beginning your home search should have included these expenses. If it did not, you need to accumulate adequate reserves to deal with the above as well as with emergencies or to make your mortgage payment in case of illness or loss of income.

In the meantime, know what sources of financing are open to you in an emergency — you may have to use a home equity loan, a second mortgage or an installment loan.
WHEN IS A MORTGAGE DELINQUENT?

Payment is considered late if the lender receives it after the due date set in your mortgage. A history of chronic lateness will harm you if a real emergency occurs. Serious consequences begin when a payment is more than 15 days late.

At 15 days late: The lender usually charges a late payment fee (the timing and amount of late charges vary from lender to lender).

Two or more mortgage payments owed: Unless specific arrangements are made with your lender, you must make all payments and late charges before another payment is accepted and the loan is again considered current.

Three or more mortgage payments due and unpaid: The loan may be given to the lender’s attorney and foreclosure proceedings initiated. The entire balance of the loan may be due immediately. In addition to the payments due, you may be liable for legal fees incurred by the lender. At this point, you may be in danger of losing your home.

PLANNING FOR UNEXPECTED CHANGES TO YOUR INCOME

Many times the primary causes of foreclosure and bankruptcy are unexpected, such as illness, change in work schedule, loss of employment or change in marital status. Few of us factor these things into our plans, but all of us should have some idea what we can do if trouble strikes. It’s much easier to identify alternatives before problems occur.

If you think your situation may change, don’t risk delinquency and the possibility of losing your home. Talk to your lender or servicing company early.

If you have equity in your house, you may be able to acquire a second mortgage or equity line of credit to consolidate your bills. This can improve your financial situation quickly, but be careful — you are incurring more debt. Make sure you have a solid plan for meeting these new debt obligations in the short term.

If you can’t generate the funds on your own, there are many legitimate organizations dedicated to helping people in short-term trouble. Many churches, civic groups and nonprofit housing assistance or counseling agencies have or know of programs. State and local housing agencies are also places to seek help. It is key that you use time wisely and take some preliminary steps before real trouble strikes.

WHAT TO DO IF FINANCIAL TROUBLE HITS

Lenders do not want to foreclose on a mortgage. Foreclosures can cost more than can be made back, so lenders foreclose only as a way of limiting losses on a defaulted loan. If you do get behind on your payments, your lender or servicing company (the company that collects your payments) may be able work with you to bring the loan current. To do so, however, you must stay in communication with your lender/servicer and be honest about your financial situation.

Your lender’s willingness to help you may depend heavily on your past payment record. If you have made consistently timely payments and had no defaults, you should find the lender much more receptive than if you have a record of unexplained chronic late payments.

If you are falling behind in your payments, or know that you are likely to in the immediate future, contact the company that collects your payments right away about alternative payment arrangements. The servicing company will ask for information about your monthly income and expenses. Be sure to use realistic figures based on your current financial situation. The company will also need information on your assets and liabilities, including all debts and monthly payments and when they are due. If the servicer needs proof of income (pay stubs, unemployment check stubs, tax returns, etc.) the company will let you know. Remember, your lender/servicer does not want to foreclose but does need timely communication and information in order to work with you.
WORKING WITH YOUR LENDER OR SERVICER TO AVOID FORECLOSURE

An agreement between you and your lender or servicer to prevent the loss of your home is called a loan “workout plan.” It will have specific deadlines you must meet to avoid foreclosure, so it must be based on what you really can do to bring the loan up to date again.

The nature of the workout plan will depend on the seriousness of the default, your prospects for obtaining funds to end the default, whether your financial problems are short term or long term and the current value of your property.

If the default is caused by a temporary condition likely to end within 60 days, the lender may consider granting you “temporary indulgence,” a short period in which no payment is collected. An example of when this may be considered is a house that has been sold but the sale has not settled; another is a pending insurance settlement. The lender will want documented evidence, such as the sales contract, before granting indulgence.

If you suffered a temporary loss of income but can demonstrate that your income has returned to its previous levels, the lender or servicer may structure a “repayment plan.” This requires normal mortgage payments to be made as scheduled, along with an additional amount that will end the delinquency in no more than 12 to 24 months. In some cases, this additional amount may be a lump sum due at a specific date in the future. Repayment plans are probably the most frequently used type of agreement.

It may be impossible for you to make any payments at all for some time. If you have a good payment record with the lender, a “forbearance plan” will allow you to suspend payments or make reduced payments for a specified length of time. In most cases the length of the plan will not exceed 18 months and will stipulate the start of foreclosure action if you default on the agreement.

Workout plans represent a last-ditch effort by you and your lender to keep you in your home. They are not substitutes for good financial planning and may not be available if payment records are poor or the financial hardship is likely to be significant and long-lasting. Lenders and servicing companies will work closely with borrowers who are having a period of emergency and hardship to try and keep them in the home if possible. Clearly, having a good payment record is important as is communicating with your lender at the first sign of trouble. Your lender or servicer wants to work with you. Anyone can have unexpected difficulties from time to time. Open communication with your lender can help avoid unnecessary complications.
